There’s nothing progressive about relying on outdated, dirty coal plants. While most of the nation is moving away from coal, New York could take a big step backward by re-opening an old, polluting plant in the Mid-Hudson Valley. Now is not the time to bail out failing coal plants that put our families’ health at risk. It’s time to build a renewable energy economy. It’s time to move New York beyond coal.

action.sierraclub.org/CuomoCoalFail