HOW TO STOP BIG COAL IN ITS TRACKS
Department of Environmental Quality Hearing

THIS IS NOT JUST ANOTHER HEARING — It could be our best shot at preventing millions of tons of dirty coal from traveling down the Columbia River every year. Coal trains, barges, terminals, and ships are a threat to our communities’ health and safety, our economy, and our climate.

We can do better.

Dear Governor Kitzhaber and Director Pedersen,

You can stop coal export in its tracks. I urge you to deny the Air Containment Discharge Permit and other state permits that will pave the way for Ambre Energy’s Morrow Pacific coal export project. Coal is toxic, and DEQ should use its full authority to protect the entire Columbia River from toxic coal dust. This includes requiring a 401 water quality certification that will evaluate all impacts of dirty coal on our river.

Oregon should also refrain from making a decision on any permits until an independent Health Impact Assessment is reviewed and the federal government evaluates the significant impacts of coal export in an Environmental Impact Study. Coal harms our lungs, our water, and our climate. Stand on the right side of history: reject coal export in Oregon.
