WHY FAMILY PLANNING MATTERS
FOR PEOPLE AND THE PLANET

Seminyak Lounge

Population, Health and Environment (PHE) promotes greater equity in reproductive health by reaching remote, vulnerable populations. Through an integrated approach, PHE achieves family planning outcomes and contributes to improvements in nutrition and maternal and child health, as well as improvements in critical non-health sectors like food security, livelihoods, and environmental conservation.

Join us bright and early at 7:00am for breakfast and conversation to learn more about how integrated approaches benefit both women and the planet.

This session, sponsored by Sierra Club, Pathfinder International, Population Reference Bureau, PAI, John Snow Inc. and FHI360, will utilize an interactive “World Café” format to highlight projects and policy initiatives - from South East Asia to Madagascar to Uganda - that show how an integrated approach to address both human well-being and the health of our planet can yield multiple benefits for women and the environment.
