California’s power mix appears to be clean, but at a regional level the consequence of California demand could result in additional coal fired power in Utah. This is called resource shuffling or ‘leakage.’ To avoid increasing emissions, California’s legislature should not approve creating a regional market until PacifiCorp plans for the retirement of their coal plants.