In New York, an electric vehicle is about 70 percent lower in emissions, even factoring in emissions from electricity.
Dear Gov. Cuomo,

Thank you for your ongoing commitment to the Zero Emission Vehicle (ZEV) multi-state agreement and your investment in electric vehicle (EV) charging stations. This is an important step toward the large-scale shift toward electric vehicles needed to reach New York’s goal of reducing climate-disrupting pollution by 40 percent by 2030.

As the single most effective step to get more EVs on the road, I urge you to enact a consumer rebate for the sale or lease of electric vehicles. Such a rebate would bring New York’s EV growth up to pace with other states like California, Massachusetts, and Pennsylvania, and bring our state closer to meeting our climate goals.

It’s time to put zero-emission vehicles in the fast lane.

Sincerely,

I’d like to volunteer to get more EVs on the road.
