The Stream Protection Rule proposed by the Office of Surface Mining Reclamation & Enforcement is essential to providing safe water for communities in coal mining regions. For too long, mining companies have been allowed to destroy the streams and clean water that are essential to public health and future economic opportunity in coal communities. It’s time for the Obama Administration to finalize this much-needed safeguard — because everyone has a right to clean water.